

Chapkis and Webb's new book provides a human element to the history, pharmacology, psychology, and politics of medical marijuana in a way that no other work has. Readers will cheer and weep for Mike and Valerie Corral, fall in love with patients and caregivers, and marvel at the compassion, devotion, and energy of everyone involved in this movement. Opponents of medical marijuana will find respectful and comprehensive summaries of their arguments, but soon they will find themselves scratching their heads wondering how we have found ourselves in today's predicament. Proponents of medical marijuana will learn about important data and ethical perspectives while they gain an appreciation for the thinking of the other side. The book's as riveting as a detective novel, as informative as a textbook, and as moving as a romance. I loved reading it and sure wish I'd written it.

Using as their stage this fascinating profile of one remarkable organization, Chapkis and Webb tackle the broader, complex history of medical marijuana in America. Through compelling interviews with patients, public officials, law enforcement officers and physicians, Chapkis and Webb ask what distinguishes a legitimate patient from an illegitimate pothead, good drugs from bad, medicinal effects from just getting high. Dying to Get High combines abstract argument and the messier terrain of how people actually live, suffer and die, and offers a moving account of what is at stake in ongoing debates over the legalization of medical marijuana.

WENDY CHAPKIS is professor of Sociology and Women and Gender Studies at the University of Southern Maine in Portland, ME. She is the author of the award-winning book Live Sex Acts: Women Performing Erotic Labor and Beauty Secrets: Women and the Politics of Appearance.

RICHARD J. WEBB is a lecturer in Communication Studies at San Jose State University.
